

PMC

PMC is short for The Professional Monitor Company, and in the brand's 30 year history, PMC loudspeakers have been used by the BBC, Metropolis Mastering, Stevie Wonder's Wonderland Studio and more. That professional heritage of making loudspeakers with low coloration and yet are capable of both high volume levels and deep bass has made the brand extremely popular in domestic circles, too.

From its first days, PMC has used advanced engineering to better reach those goals. Starting with its Advanced Transmission Line (now featuring its Laminair streamlined air flow system), PMC's loudspeakers have continued to push the limits of acoustic engineering. Every aspect of PMC's loudspeaker design is evaluated with similar gravitas. Put simply, any company that teams up with the National Physical Laboratory in its research deserves to be taken seriously.
